in THE BEGGARS

THAT OL' HOLLOW LOG OVER THERE WILL DO!

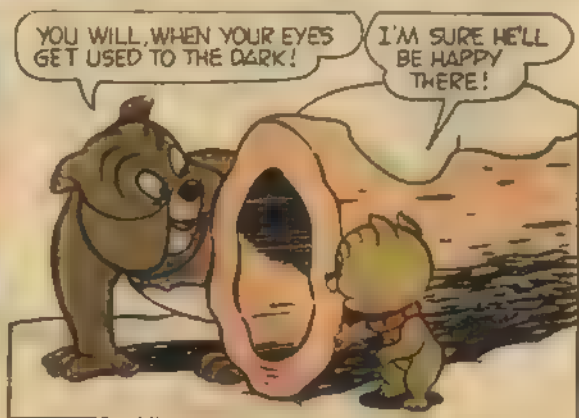

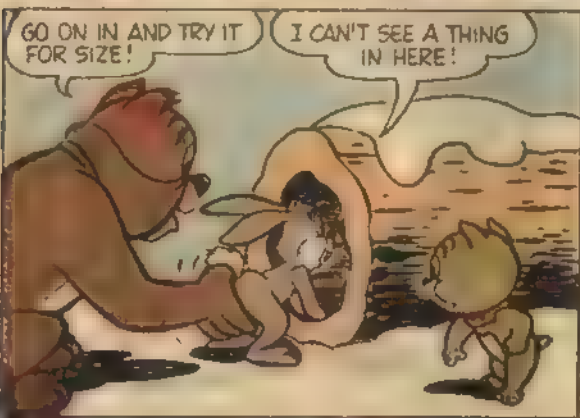

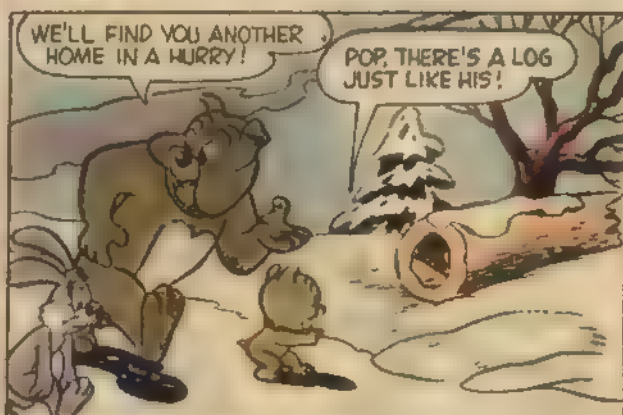

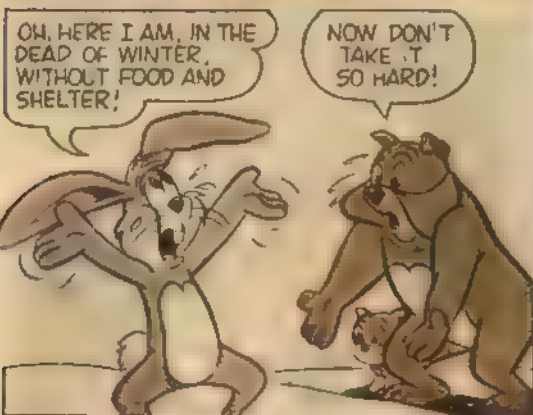

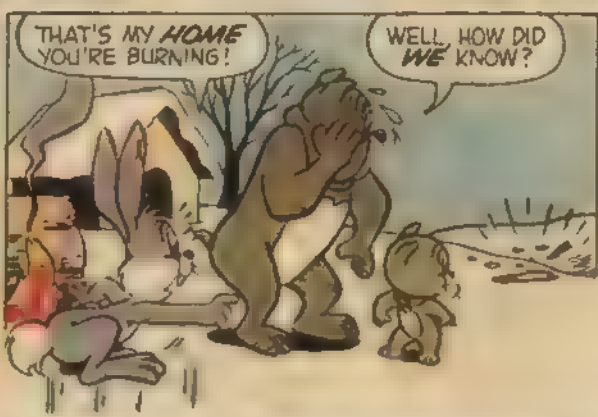

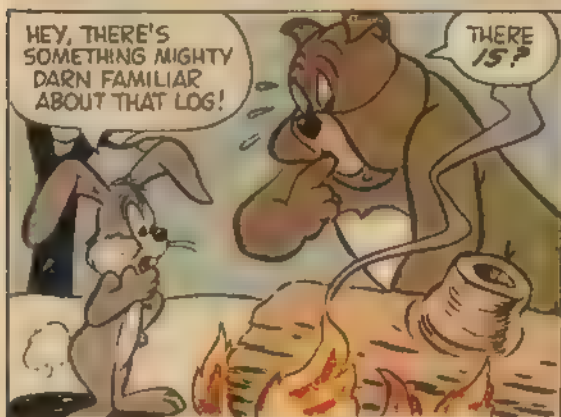

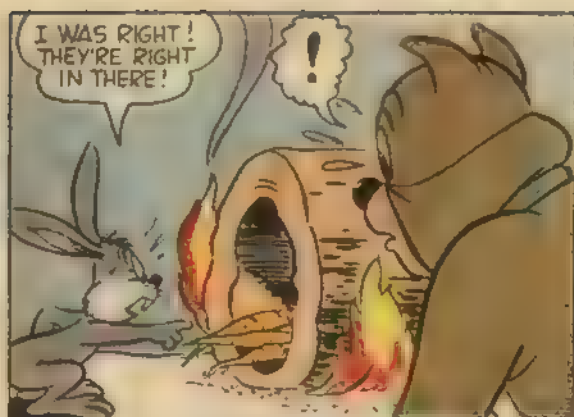

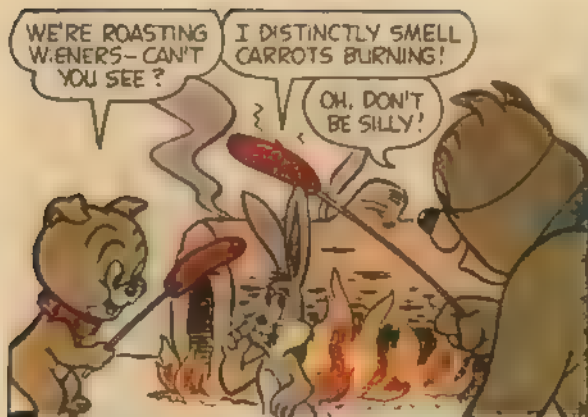

WE'LL SOON HAVE A NICE BED OF COALS!

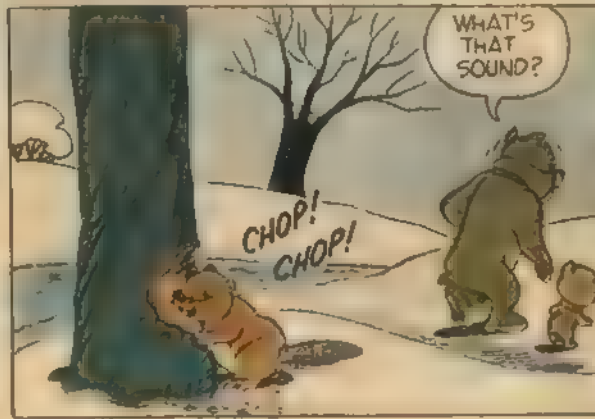

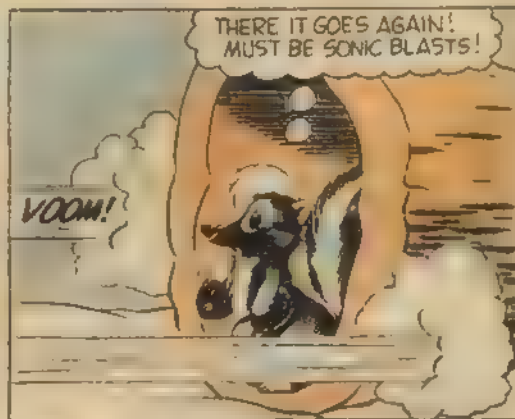

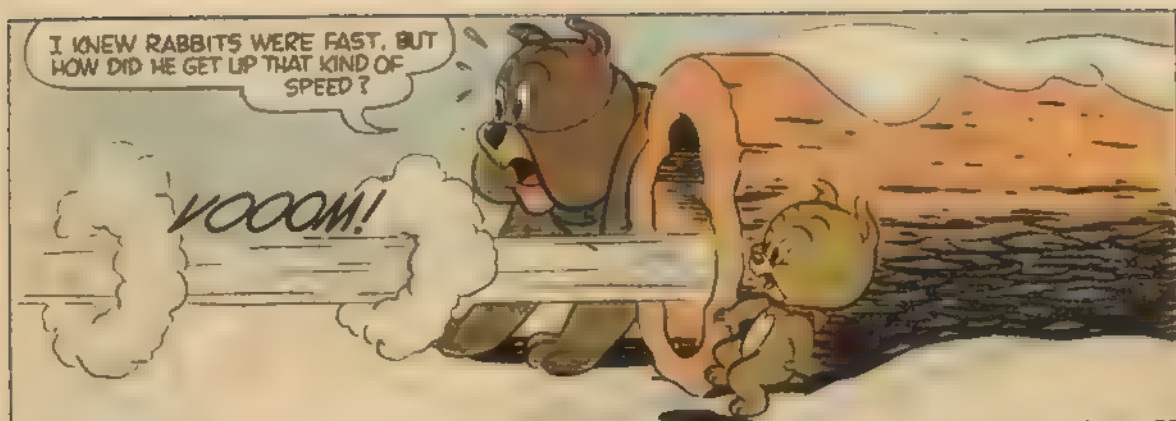

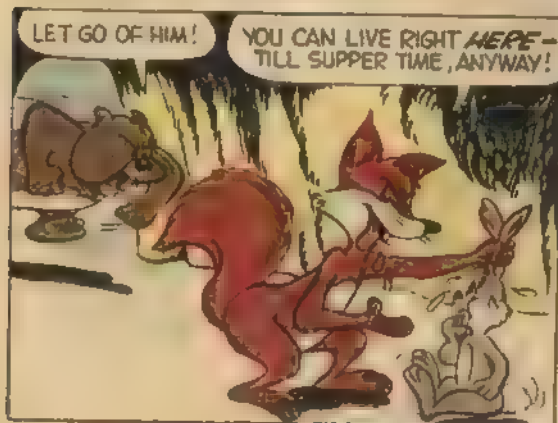

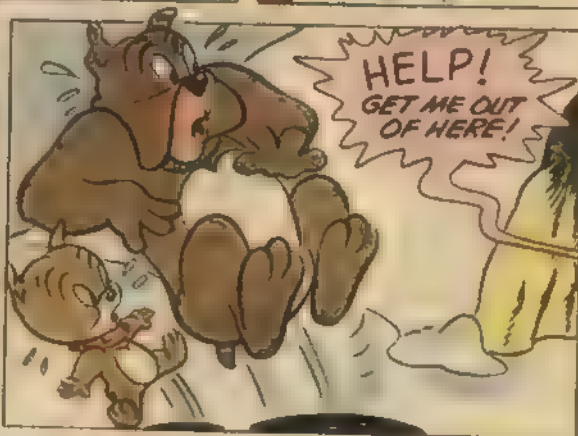

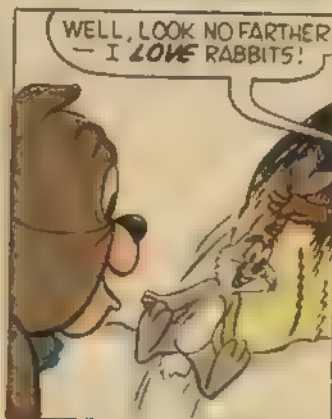

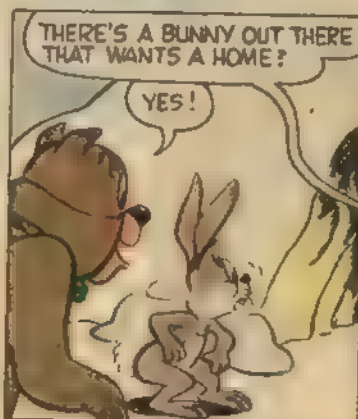

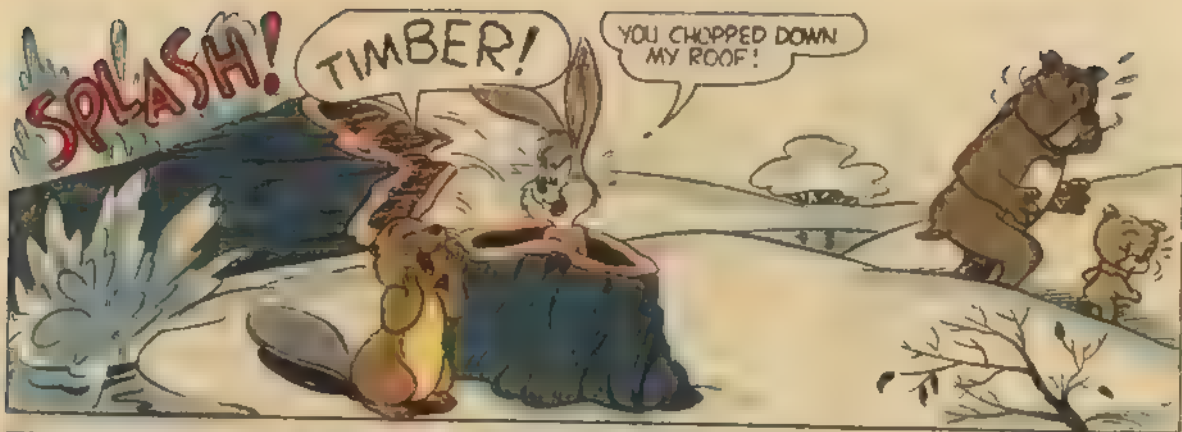

I'M GOING TO COOK MINE MEDIUM WELL!

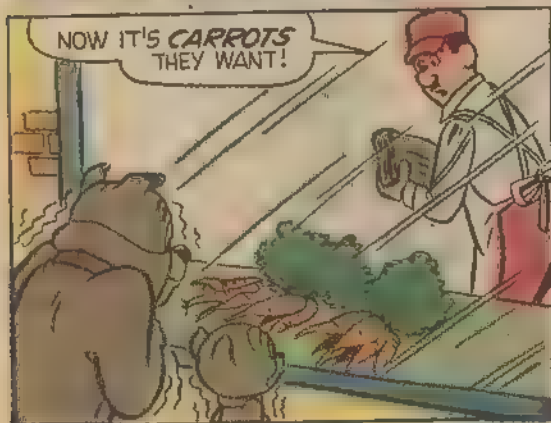

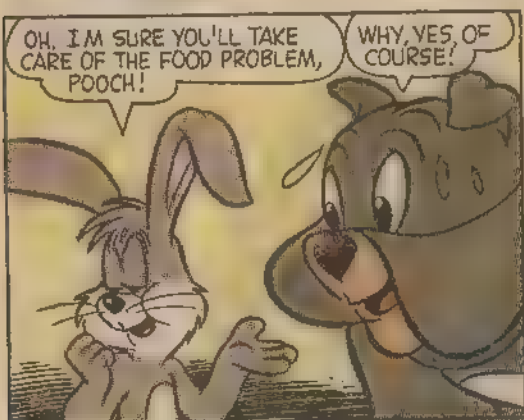

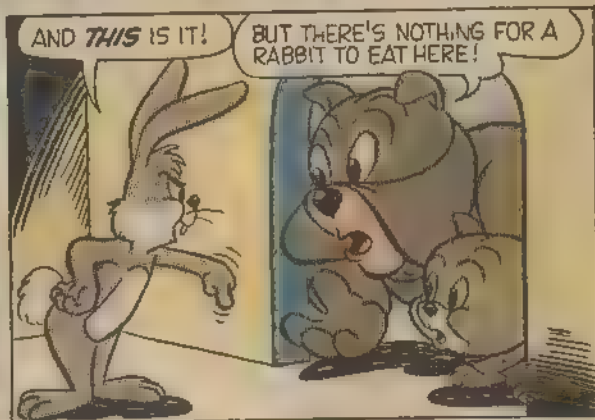

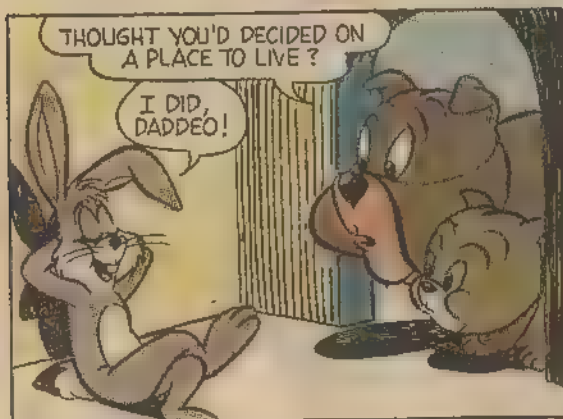

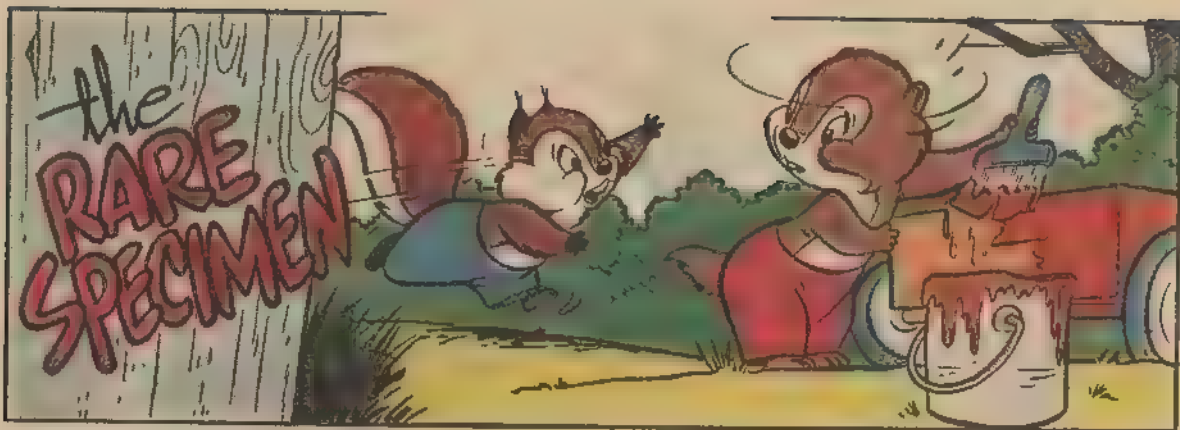

SNIFF!
SNIFF!

Wuff, the prairie dog, was busily giving his wagon a coat of red paint when Sammy Squirrel skidded to a stop in front of him. "Guess what!" Sammy panted. "A scientific expedition has just landed here on the prairie!"

Wuff leaped to his feet excitedly. "I'll bet that's Microscope Mike," he cried. "I heard he was headed this way!"

"If it is," Sammy cautioned, "we'd better be careful. That fellow puts everything he sees under a microscope hoping to find something unusual!"

"Well," Wuff grinned reassuringly, "there's nothing very special about a prairie dog and a squirrel. Come on!" And off they ran, completely forgetting about the wagon and paint.

Hidden behind a nearby cactus bush, Charlie Coyote gloated over the news he had just overheard. "Here's my chance to catch up with those two fugitives from a stew pot!" he drooled. And, searching his disguise kit, he made himself look as much like a scientist as he could. "I'll have prairie dog and squirrel stew tonight, for sure," he cackled happily as he sprinted after Wuff and Sammy.

Charlie was so intent on chasing Wuff and Sammy that he did not notice the can of paint by Wuff's wagon until his foot accidentally hit it and rolled it over on its side. The red paint made a pool in the prairie dirt, bathing Charlie's legs and feet a vivid scarlet. "Bah," he roared angrily, wading through the red puddle and speeding after his prey.

Wuff and Sammy were admiring the big airplane when Charlie finally crept up in back of them. "I wonder where Microscope Mike is!" Wuff breathed excitedly.

"Someone calling me?" a sugary voice murmured from behind them.

Wuff and Sammy spun around in amazement. "Be careful!" Sammy hissed. "We may be more unusual than you think!"

"Y-you wouldn't be interested in us," Wuff told the "scientist" eagerly. "There's nothing rare about us."

Charlie smacked his lips hungrily. "Rare, medium, or well-done," he cackled, "it makes no difference!"

Sammy backed away fearfully. "He sounds like Charlie!" he gasped.

"Wouldn't you like to see my microscope?" Charlie asked cunningly. And, reaching into his big pocket, he drew out his stew pot.

"It is Charlie!" Wuff cried.

Just then, a figure stepped from the plane. "What have we here?" Microscope Mike asked with great interest.

"We're surrounded!" Sammy shrieked.

But the real scientist walked past Wuff and Sammy and examined Charlie Coyote very carefully. "Amazing!" he exclaimed.

"I'm just a coyote," Charlie whimpered, ripping off his disguise.

"What a find!" the scientist breathed. "A coyote with red feet! The museum will never believe it!"

Charlie cowered fearfully. "M-museum?"

"I must get my microscope," the scientist said, returning to the plane.

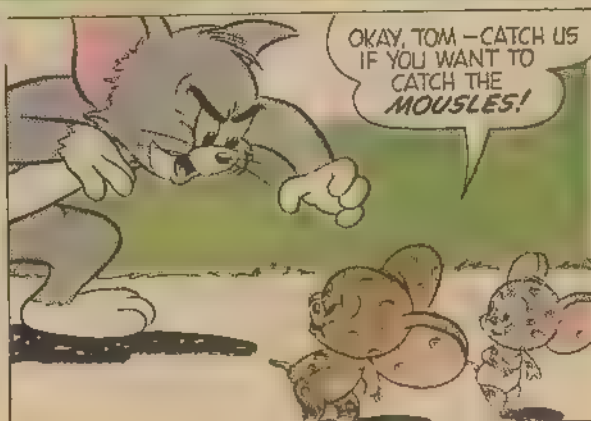

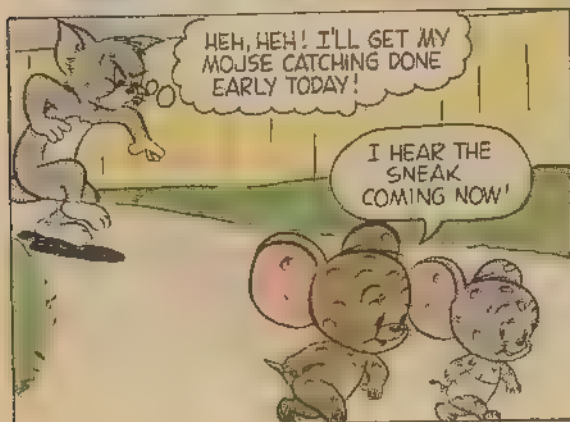

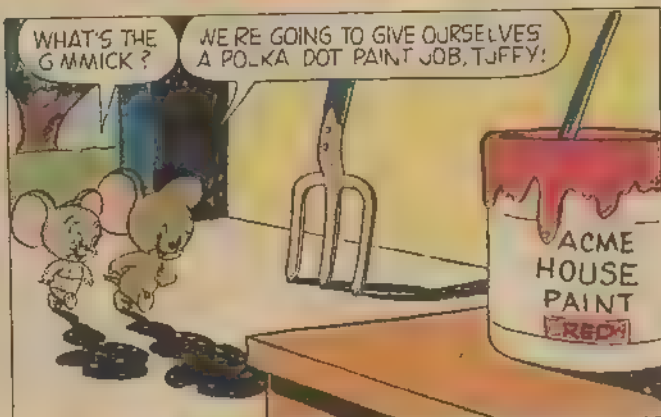

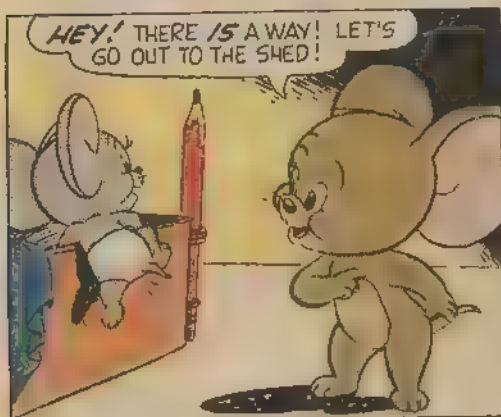

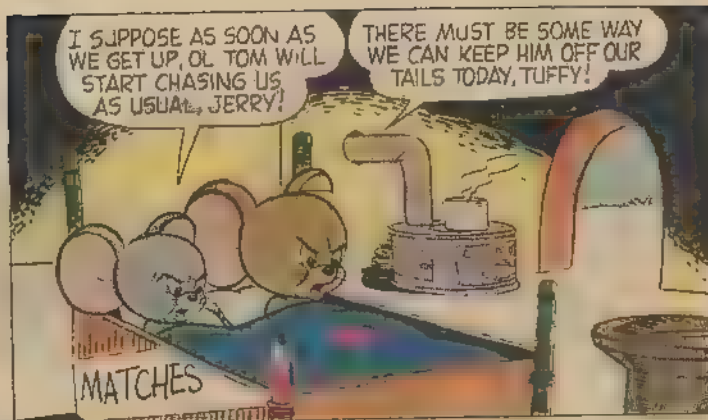

Charlie was shaking so hard, he had to make several starts before he got his feet off the ground. Then he whizzed out of sight as fast as they would carry him, until all you could see was a cloud of dust.

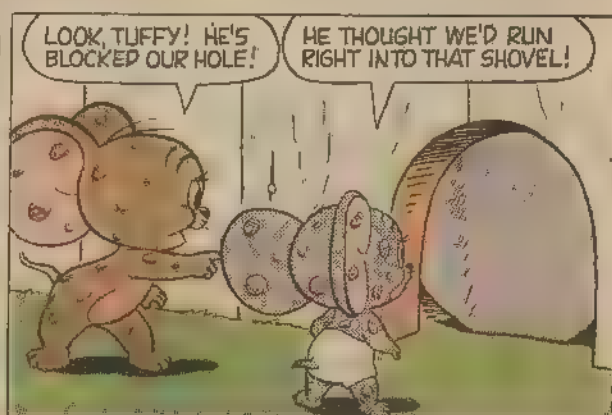

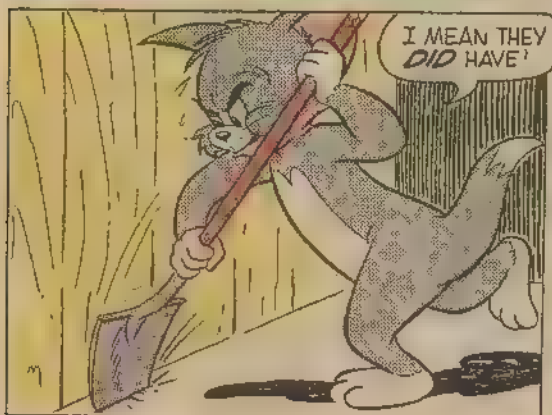

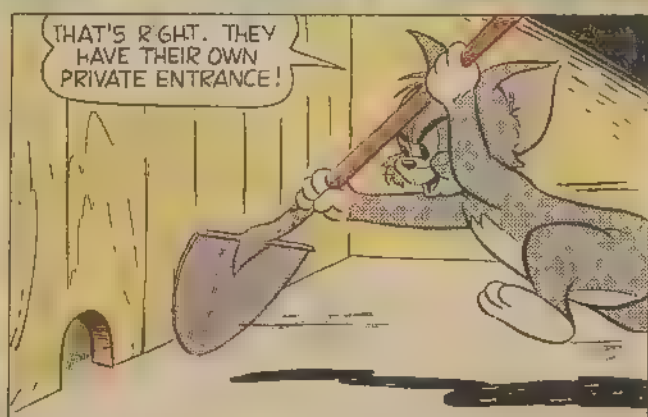

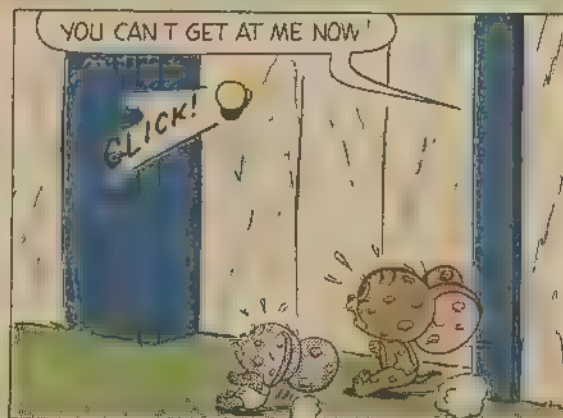

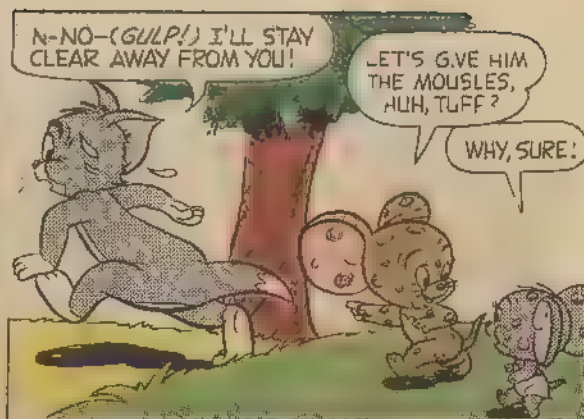

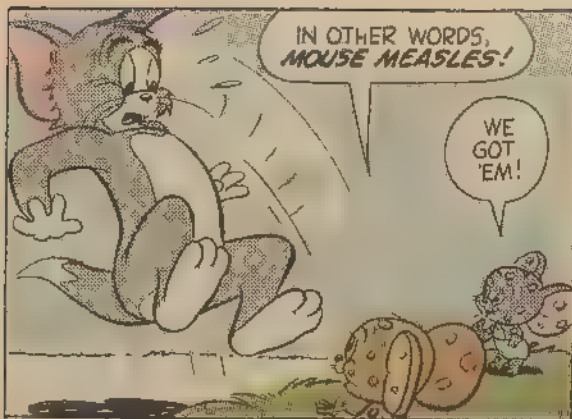

"Charlie may not be unusual," Wuff chorled. "But that was sure the rarest footwork I ever saw in my whole life!"
